Excerpt from The Jewish Spy, Vol. 2: Being a Philosophical Historical and Critical Correspondence Between Certain Jews in Turkey, Italy, France, &C But if you will please to recollect, Sire, that before your Arrival in Corsica, you were almost as obscure as Jemmy - You will pardon my Boldness. What a Misfortune is it for the Hebrew Nation, that you did not take it into your Head to set up for King of Jerusalem! Surely you could not have failed of as great Success in such an Undertaking, as in that which renders you Master of an Estate that lawfully belongs to the Genoese. What a Lustre would it have given to the Jews, if you had but been pleased to have personated the Messiah whom they expect! And how happy would it have been for that People, to have had an Adventurer at their Head, so enterprising as you are! Perhaps you thought it would be a Task too difficult, and declined it for fear you should not succeed; but you would have found considerable Supplies from the Jews of Amsterdam.
