

The Floating Light of the Goodwin Sands

No sooner were they within reach than another impatient passenger leaped overboard. This was Jims faithful dog Neptune! Watching his time with the intelligence of a human being, he sprang, with much greater precision and vigour than any human being could have done, and, alighting on Pikes shoulders, almost drove that stout boatman into the bottom of the boat. Soon the boat was as full as it could hold. All the women and children had been got into her, and many of the male passengers, so that there was no room to move; still there remained from twenty to thirty people to be rescued. Seeing this, Jim seized Neptune by the neck and flung him back into the wreck. Catching a rope that hung over the side, he also swung himself on board, saying, You and I must sink or swim together, Nep! Shove off, lads, and come back as soon as you can.
